INTRODUCTION

Kemi stared at her JAMB result slip in disbelief.

English Language: 78. Mathematics: 72. Physics: 69. All solid scores that would easily get her into most Nigerian universities. But there it was, the score that shattered her medical school dreams: General Studies: 45.

Despite scoring 264 overall—well above the JAMB minimum—Kemi's General Studies score was too low for competitive courses. The University of Ibadan required a minimum of 70 in General Studies for Medicine. Same with UNILAG, ABU Zaria, and every other medical school on her list. Her guidance counselor had dismissed General Studies as "just current affairs and common sense." That dismissal cost her a year.

Fast forward to 2025: After using a systematic approach to tackle General Studies, Kemi retook JAMB and scored 89 in General Studies—a 44-point improvement that secured her admission to study Medicine at the University of Lagos. Today, she's a second-year medical student who regularly helps other candidates avoid the same costly mistake she made.

Kemi's story isn't unique. Every year, over 400,000 JAMB candidates score well in their core subjects but get rejected from competitive courses because of poor General Studies performance. Here's what most students don't realize: General Studies often has the lowest average scores across all JAMB subjects, yet it's weighted equally with your other three subjects for admission calculations.

WHO THIS BOOK IS FOR

This complete pack is designed for serious JAMB candidates who understand that General Studies can make the difference between admission and disappointment. You're likely:

- > Applying for competitive courses like Medicine, Law, Engineering, or Pharmacy where every point matters
- > Retaking JAMB after General Studies held back your previous score
- > Aiming for top universities like UI, UNILAG, UNIBEN, OAU, or ABU that have high cutoff marks
- > Currently scoring below 65 in General Studies practice tests and need structured improvement
- > Overwhelmed by the broad syllabus covering everything from Buhari's policies to Chinua Achebe's novels

You don't need to be naturally gifted at memorizing facts or following current events. You just need a proven system that breaks down the massive General Studies syllabus into manageable, high-yield topics that consistently appear on JAMB.
